

Balancing with Universal Frequency Codes

The Sanskrit word dukham means literally “bad axle space,” a reference to an improperly attached cartwheel, which leads to a bumpy ride. It can also be translated “a bone twisted out of its socket.” The most common translation is “suffering,” the condition of the Kali Yuga, and the structure with which nearly all of us are born.

Physics has proven that everything is a vibration of energy. Balancing with universal frequency codes is based on Hebrew vowels and tones that carry specific frequencies in a familiar, recognizable language into the body. These messages create an opening for the innate wisdom to bring the body systems back into harmony and balance.

So it makes sense that specific sound waves would be able to work on the body more directly than even chemicals or other substances.

Sound can and will have a direct influence on every cell, every organ and especially on muscles, nerves, bones and structure of the spinal column.

Therefore, it's not astonishing that sounds, uttered by a human voice, have a very deep impact on all levels of our being. The sensitive nervous systems of children are especially receptive to subtle nudging towards peacefulness, groundedness, and receptivity through sound.

The organs, the tissues, even metabolism and thought-structures, all of them have their specific light and quantum frequencies as well as informational structures. Once the universal frequency codes are installed, it enables maximum performance of the other energy medicine modalities.

Two sessions of Level 1 are standard, at $350 total.
