

SCIO Biofeedback

Do you recall the old Star Trek shows where Mr. Spock or Dr. McCoy scans someone briefly with a tricorder and then reports to Captain Kirk about the person's health?

How far into the future do you suppose we might have to go before this type of technology is available to humanity (not just in a TV series) ? What would you say to the idea that it is available now?

SCIO is a quantum medical device. It is a small quantum field generator hooked to a standard laptop computer. The laptop houses the rather massive software which facilitates the conversation between the SCIO operator and the device. The device can report to the operator the condition of the various systems in the client's body, and the operator can tell the SCIO what to treat. Treatment involves suggesting the frequencies of healthy tissues, encouraging the body to repair itself.

SCIO can be used as a resonance indicator. There are more than 10,000 items in SCIO's database, and the beginning of each session involves SCIO asking the client, energetically, the same question over and over: Would this substance make you stronger? We would get the same answers if we had used applied kinesiology, but much faster; we can obtain percentages of resonance for the 10,000-plus items in about three minutes. This makes it particularly useful with small children, who often cannot give us much verbal information about their symptoms.

Because the device has been developed out of quantum mechanics, a branch of physics in which space can be mathematically eliminated, SCIO can help the operator do long-distance sessions. This makes it valuable with animals, who would be uncomfortable leaving their familiar home, and with anyone who cannot travel, including, for example, someone who does not wish to drive in icy conditions.

A SCIO session is especially useful if the nature of the issue is unclear, and we simply need more information in order to decide how to proceed. Most people find a SCIO session relaxing, informative, detoxifying, and clarifying.

Beverly has been using SCIO with hundreds of clients for the past ten years. The cost of a one-hour session is $110.

Thank you, Mr. Spock!
